

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Michael Crumplin is a retired general surgeon. He was educated at Wellington College and the Middlesex Hospital. Having studied medicine in the Napoleonic wars for over 40 years, and taking an interest in surgical history generally, he now devotes time to writing, lecturing and giving advice to students, research workers, authors and the media. Curator and Archivist at the English College, he has been involved in the development of the new Hunterian Museum and in historical publications. He is Treasurer and a Trustee of the Waterloo Committee.

Ann Ferguson is a retired anaesthetist from Kent, and is the grand-daughter-in-law of Charles Macalister.

Kate Hallett qualified as an archivist at University College London in 1994. She worked at the National Archives, Kew, before moving to the North West, and working for Liverpool Record Office until December 2003. Since then she has been busy bringing up her two children.

John Welshman is a Senior Lecturer in Public Health in the Institute for Health Research at Lancaster University. His research interests are in the history of social policy and public health in twentieth-century Britain, on which he has published widely. His most recent book is Underclass: A History of the Excluded, 1880-2000 (London and New York, 2005). He is currently working on care in the community since 1948, and on the history of debates around the concept of transmitted deprivation.