

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

M.W.Royden teaches history at Whitby High School, South Wirral and is a part-time lecturer in Local History in the department of Continuing Education of the University of Liverpool. He is author of histories of the Royal School for the Blind (Liverpool), Mill Road Hospital and the Oxford Street and Catherine Street hospitals.

C.D.King retired from the position of Chief Technician in the Department of Physics in the University of Liverpool with an interest in the history of physics. He went to complete an MSc in the History of Science and Technology and a doctoral thesis on Chadwick's work on the atomic bomb in Liverpool. He is particularly interested in the physics of early X-ray and radioactive treatments. Since 1998 he has been course organiser for the MSc in the History of Science and Technology of the University of Liverpool.

M. A(nne) Crowther is Professor of Social History in the University of Glasgow. She is author of The Workhouse System, 1834-1929 (London: Batsford, 1981).

Professor John Ashton is currently Regional Director of Public Health for the North West. He was instrumental in establishing a lectureship in Public Health History at the Medical School in the University of Liverpool and in introducing the subject as part of the new undergraduate medical curriculum.